To Tigger: and For All Who Carry a Very Special Dog in Their Hearts

by Chris Walkowicz

Tigger, I need to talk about you, to let my grief and loneliness pour out, but I've shared my burden with my family and friends long enough. It's time to begin healing, I know. But how can I when I still hurt so much and miss you so terribly?

You were everything we ever wanted in a dog: an exciting mover, superbly angulated and a strong head. Your slight imperfections were easy to accept; they just made you more human! But most of all, your sweetness, your loving acceptance of all that came your way. Everyone who felt your warmth loved you. You truly were a special dog and our best friend. What am I going to do without your brown head resting on my arm or fitting so well under my hand?

In 20 years of breeding, I've had many litters and little did I think that there would be problems for you—a strong, healthy youngster. In the end, it was your strength that was our enemy. You kept right on doing as we asked, caring for your puppies, showing no symptoms of the peritonitis to alert us to its danger. You slipped from our grasp, still wagging your tail with love. Your loss was only made bearable by the knowledge we had to go on; we had to care for your puppies or we would lose them too.

Your sister helped, by nursing two at a time. She has babies of her own, and she can't handle the whole brood of 13. So we play musical puppies and switch your brown babies in among her black ones. They're getting some mothering, but it's still not the same, and my heart hurts for them, too. I see them curled up against her and picture how it would be to have them all piled contentedly next to your protective, loving warmth. I look at your babies and know you gave your life for them.
