BCCA Health Survey: Part 2

Linda Aronson

[Ed. note: Part 1 of the Health Survey appeared in the May 1994 issue of the Beardie Bulletin, Volume 24, Number 1.]

Infectious Diseases

This section of the survey caused more confusion than any of the others, I think. I suppose any disease appearing in the later categories should have been listed as being acute or chronic in the first two categories, but clearly they weren't. Another source of confusion was what was viral and what was bacterial. One of the most commonly reported conditions was kennel cough (12 cases). The most important cause is Bordetella bronchiseptica—a bacterium, but several viruses, bacteria, and mycoplasma (which isn't quite one or the other) have been involved in causing kennel cough. One of the acute group had hepatitis, but usually, despite the name, this is not an infectious disease in dogs. Four staph infections, two strep and one each type-2 adenovirus and coliform infection were identified, other agents weren't determined for bacterial enteritis and respiratory infections. Two cases of Lyme disease were reported, as well as two cases of tonsillitis (same
