HERDING CLINIC

An experienced clinician can offer solutions to your most vexing problems, expound on their philosophy regarding stock and dog interactions, and demonstrate new ways to accomplish the desired outcome.

Four Beardie handlers with their six Beardies recently attended a herding clinic at Brian Moline's Farm in Ashland Nebraska. The instructor was Dave Viklund from Washington. Cindy, Sue, Terry and Barbara have met up many times during the years at various Clinics and Trials throughout the US with several generations of Beardies in herding. This group is the latest—Bentley, Otis, Kylie, Dara, Rory and Myst.

BARBARA

My original introduction to a Herding Clinic was years ago about the time I really got hooked on herding and have gone to one or two a year since then. At this Clinic I worked Rory who just turned 11 and is running at the Advanced level and Myst who is 4 and at that middle ground between started level and intermediate. With Rory we just honed in on continuing to challenge her dislike of coming in to pressure with sheep hugging me. The more we can do this at different places with different sheep the less of an issue it becomes for her so I am always happy to get the practice. Not easy for us to find sheep so willing to hang with me when she is walking into that pressure. Though arenas are not her favorite places she is still happy to go to work.

With Myst it is trying to get those beginning steps of a drive; she is less enthused about taking the sheep off and away from me. Most of my Beardies have been happy to have me out of the picture a bit but Myst likes having the feeling that we are working together more. I came away with the foundation of exercises to do to build on to get us to the next step. The very start is willingness to slowly walk in to me to push sheep off — anywhere along the way in a fetch.

Usually by the next year's clinic we have been successful with what we'd learn the year before and were ready to move on to the next challenge, I hope it's the same for us with our driving.

CINDY

After talking about the clinic with a non-herding friend, she made the following comments: Glad you're picking up new things. I think as you and the dogs get more experienced, you will probably only get one or two new things out of a clinic. At least that's how ballet always worked.

My response went something like: I wouldn't say that's how herding works. We aren't just working on ourselves in a venue that is classical in movement and relies primarily on the individual's expertise, like you do in ballet. We're working on the relationship with the dog and every dog is different. Even the same dog is different in approach, depending on how the livestock behaves. So, we have to take into consideration ourselves, the dog, and the stock, not to mention how each of those things are affected by outside influences. For instance, the weather or the behavior of the dog that worked the stock before your dog. It's never been my experience that my dog and I have had so much experience that we are not in a learning mode. If we're lucky, we can focus on a couple of things to work with and not be overwhelmed with everything that needs work. Dave typically focuses on a couple of things to try to break it into baby steps we can build on. Plus that doesn't always include the stuff we screwed up in between clinics.
