VERSATILITY NEWS

Joanne Williamson • balgrae@ix.netcom.com

The following beardedies will receive versatility award certificates at the 2023 Nationals in Frankenmuth, MI. I will have the certificates at every venue so please look me up so that I can present you with your certificate. If you can't make Nationals this year, don't worry, your certificate will be mailed to you. And if you don't see your beardedie's name listed here and you think you have qualified for an award, please contact me at balgrae@ix.netcom.com. Congratulations to all!

HERDING NEWS

Elsa Sell • tillyrusty7@gmail.com

The herding committee is seeking a new member or two to assist with maintenance of several award or herding specialty trial small replicas. With the BCCA changes in awards and trophy procedures last year, it is now the responsibility of a committee to assure that these replicas are housed safely and sent to the National (or individual of a yearly award if they are not attending the specialty). Now is your opportunity to learn about committee work and give back in support the Beardie herding community. Contact Elsa.

CONFESSIONS OF AN OBEDIENCE JUNKIE, POSITIVE HERDING SEMINAR

Laurie Lo

BARB BUCHMAYER'S POSITIVE HERDING SEMINAR

With five or so sheep in a free-standing pen, the clinician instructed the handlers to engage with their dogs. The teams maintained a 12 ft. distance from the sheep and a good distance away from each other. If a team couldn't engage because of the ovine distraction, it moved further away from the pen until the dog and handler could interact with each other (treating with food, playing tug, doing basic obedience maneuvers).

Some dogs had a terrible time ignoring the sheep. One little slick-coated border collie became catatonic when she saw sheep. Her handler had to move her a considerable distance away from the pen to get her to "think" about anything other than the sheep. Nobody asked the sheep what they thought about the activity. But I suspect that two of the ewes retreated to their bunks after the seminar and enjoyed two pints of cold beer.

The idea of teaching a dog to engage with its trainer in the face of mind-bending sheep is a fundamental "herding" skill. It develops a dog that can respond to a handler's commands when working the flock. We obedience junkies teach the exact same skill to our competition obedience dogs.

I had never attended a herding seminar in which the clinician discussed "proofing" the dog around stock before allowing it to engage the sheep. Not only does this benefit the dog and handler, but it benefits the sheep. They don't have to worry (as much) about a Cujo entering their field and terrorizing them. (Sheep, as prey animals, are always worrying about Cujos).

The clinician, Barb Buchmayer, has developed a new way of teaching herding and is spreading the word! It all began 15 years ago, when Barb decided that there had to be a more dog friendly way to train herding. She felt that clicker training held the key to this approach, and she even attended Bob Bailey's FAMOUS Chicken Camp.

While Barb was working on developing an operant conditioning approach to teaching herding fundamentals, Sally Adam, a clicker trainer in South Africa, contacted Barb about teaching her how to herd using positive reinforcement. Barb, a 30 plus year Open herding competition veteran, and Sally, a complete novice, began their partnership. Barb communicated her learning strategies to Sally via the internet and Skype. Sally beta tested these strategies with her border collie Renn. In 2016, Renn became the South African Sheepdog Association's National Reserve Junior Champion.

Day One

While some of the workshop attendees had some herding experiences, many were complete novices. No one had ever experienced Barb's approach to herding. All of us were ready to learn and to have fun.

We learned that herding is a team effort! Even though most dogs with instinct will gather the sheep and move them to the handler, the handler must come up with a (stock movement) game plan. The handler then relays the game plan to the dog via commands and adjusts the calls depending on how the livestock reacts to the dog.

A dog with a lot of instinct will learn how to read the stock and adjust as he executes the commands. A talented dog with a lot of instinct is like Kansas City Chief quarterback Patrick Mahomes who scrambles to make a touchdown when the offensive front line unexpectedly collapses. A dog with little or no instinct will rely upon the handler to read the stock and make those adjustments for him via additional commands. All dogs on the talent spectrum must learn basic herding skills and their associated commands.

We got to try our hand at teaching our dogs several herding commands: the directions, a stop/down, and a walk up. Some folks used pure operant conditioning, others used luring. We all used food. I learned that the quicker I treated my dog to mark a particular nano-behavior, the quicker my dog learned the behavior. As a leash and collar trainer, I was not quick on the draw with food. I learned. I became a Pez dispenser in a five-year old's hand. My eyes were not attuned to noticing nano-behaviors. I learned. I became an eagle.

Barb warned us not to try to do too much when shaping a behavior. Baby steps. Quick rewards. I had to adjust the criteria (up the ante) for a specific behavior on the fly when I felt my dog was ready to move on. That was tough! If my dog became confused, I had to lower the criteria on the fly and then build the criteria back up. The learning dynamic was very different from the pressure-release modality that I normally use. But it was fun! My dog was a locomotive moving slowly at the start, gathering speed as he began to understand the process and running down the track once he figured things out.

Day Two

While we spent the first day indoors in a climate-controlled agility building, the next day we gathered at a sheep farm. It was cool and cloudy. Just perfect for learning about moving livestock. After the handler/dog teams worked engagement near the penned sheep (described at the beginning of this article), Barb introduced us to sheep and dog reading.

The twelve teams spaced themselves equidistant on an imaginary 30 ft. diameter circle with the penned sheep in the middle. Each team took turns walking directly toward the sheep. The handler was to stop when the sheep noticed the dog. Most of the folks were unfamiliar with sheep, but I, the sheep farmer, could see the concern in their eyes as each team approached. A sheep ear would flick, stomp a leg, the group would bunch up and move.

Many handlers did not notice the effect their dogs were having on the sheep until the sheep moved. It took a few tries for some handlers to identify the start of the silent communication between their dogs and the sheep. While I have attended many herding seminars, this is the first time I have witnessed teams being instructed on this core subject. It is critically important for the handler to understand how sheep perceive the dog. Based upon this information, the handler can design a safe and sedate travel plan for the herd. Note in the photo below that the dog is too close to the sheep. In fact, the dog is "threatening" the sheep with its stare and close proximity. If the sheep hadn't been locked up in the pen, they would have run away dog.

The newbie teams were sweating communication bullets during the reading exercise. Some couldn't look at the sheep because they were transfixed by their dogs. But they learned how to read both at the same time! Afterward, we relaxed and watched a herding demonstration. Everyone was amazed as a seasoned team took the sheep out of the free-standing pen, walked them around a bit, and then tucked them back into the pen.

Barb outdid herself coming up with the last "A Ha!" exercise. The seminar participants formed six teams, one team member being the handler, the other the dog. Using the commands learned the previous day, the "handler" was to verbally direct the dog to move real live SHEEP! on a "course" known only to the handler. While this may seem easy, most of the folks had never been around sheep. Additionally, the herding directional commands are not self-explanatory. "Go Bye" means circle clockwise. "Away" means circle counterclockwise. The other recently learned commands: "walk up" directly toward the stock, "back" directly away from the stock, "slow," "fast," "stop" and "out" (move laterally away from the stock).

The teams were excited and fearful. Nobody wanted to look foolish. But we were all game to give this exercise a shot. I had an enthusiastic but not-so-talented dog. When Barb told me that Team April was to drive the sheep between the fence and a tree, I had an anxiety attack. The space was narrower than the group of sheep. They'd all have to shoot the gap single-file.

As my not-so-talented dog got too close to the sheep, they began to panic. I kept telling April "back." She did NOT respond. Finally, I addressed her in English. "Get back. You are putting too much pressure on the sheep.” She backed away and the sheep calmed down and walked between the fence and the tree, one after the other. We were victorious! “That’ll do, April.”

I left the seminar with a new way to train my dog to herd: train the basic commands away from sheep. Why “fight” for my dog’s attention by teaching him these commands around sheep? Once my dog understands the commands, I can “proof” those commands around my sheep. We will have a head start to interact and move stock without drama or trauma. There will be times when my dog may become confused and forget what he’s learned. When that happens, I can help him review the “forgotten” commands. That’s so much better than my watching my overwhelmed and unthinking dog chase sheep all over the field while I scream and become hoarse.

This approach is cost effective and less overwhelming for those who have to “rent” sheep. Sheep are pricey. Maybe not per head, but traveling to the sheep farm, paying for instruction, renting the sheep, and then settling up for the one your dog just killed adds up to a significant chunk of change. Why spend the time training basic commands around sheep when it is so much easier to do it at home? Cheaper too! Proof the commands at the sheep farm, but don’t waste money teaching those commands at the farm, under duress.

Without a doubt, the sheep come out on top with this approach to herding dog training. While a newbie dog may have a tough time being calm around livestock, he also can find comfort in following his handler’s commands. The sheep will thank the dog for that. Herding should not be a rodeo. It should be an activity in which the sheep are calmly moved from one place to another by the dog/handler team.

NEW ASCA OPEN HERDING TITLE, TEAM HARREY AND BRIAN WISTROM ASCA TRIALING FOR BEARDIES

by Eunice Shephard

This reporter had the opportunity to interview BCCA member Brian Wistrom about his Bearded Collie, Sallen Shotts, or “Harrey” a Scottish import, who instinctively showed the Beardie Way. Harrey earned his Open Sheep title in a recent all-breed ASCA trial competition. What follows is synopsis of an ASCA herding trial and a recommendation for interested Bearded Collie owners to try it. But first a little background.

Originally the purpose of the ASCA Stockdog Program was to preserve and promote the herding instinct of the Australian Shepherd. The program model was designed to ensure a versatile stockdog by showcasing, preserving, encouraging, retaining, challenging, and rewarding the working Australian Shepherd. A certification program was designed based on trialing courses on different classes of stock. The first sanctioned trial was held in Santa Rosa, California in 1974. In 1986, the program was expanded to allow titling of other breeds.

The core of the ASCA trialing system is comprised of three divisions: Started Trial Dog (STD), Open Trial Dog (OTD), and Advanced Trial Dog (ATD). Each division is divided into three classes: Ducks/Geese, Sheep/Goats and Cattle. Small letters c, s, or d after the title indicate the stock on which the title was earned. A Working Trial Champion title is awarded to those dogs who have received ATD (Advanced Trial Dog) titles in all three classes of stock. Also offered are a Post Advanced Trial Dog (PATD) division which runs sheep or cattle on a bigger course, a Ranch Trial Dog (RTD) division (sheep or cattle, ten-head minimum) which includes ranch work such as sorting, penning, etc. and a Farm Trial Dog (FTD, open and advance division) which includes farm work such as loading trailers, sorting, penning, working chutes etc. The Started, Open, and Advanced Trial Dog titles, as well as Post Advanced and Farm Trials, require 2 qualifying scores.

Reporter: Brian, you have a lot of experience handling your own Bearded Collies in herding. I am sure it helps being an AKC herding judge. How is participating in an ASCA trial different from AKC trialing?

Brian: There is a lot to like about ASCA trialing. First, I like the fact that ASCA has their own set of courses-the variety of ASCA courses suits all herding breeds. Secondly, you have the opportunity to fix problems your dog encounters in real time on the field as you compete. Third, there is no penalty if you wander off a specific drive line with the stock. And, best of all, there is no 50% rule as in AKC. This means in AKC if you do not earn at least 50% of the points for a specific obstacle, your run does not qualify, even if your dog aces other parts of the course.

Reporter: It sounds like there are a range of breeds entered in ASCA trials from Border Collies, to Shelties, to Rottweilers, to Corgis. Would you recommend Bearded Collies participate in ASCA trials? Why or why not?

Brian: I would recommend ASCA, as well as AHBA for trialing. More exposure to different courses and stock gives both the handler and the dog the opportunity to encounter different challenges and develop a toolkit of how to handle situations.

Reporter: Now tell me about Harrey specifically? Is he a typical Bearded Collie? Does he herd regularly at the site where the trial was held? What special competencies does Harrey have and how did he come by them?

Brian: Harrey, like all the Beardies I have been with, can have his own agenda when we enter the arena. It seems like no matter how one practices a particular move with sheep you can never be sure that will work at the trial. I wasn't sure for this past trial if he was ready for the ASCA Open class even though he has his AKC Advanced title. The little bit of practice we had at where we train didn't seem that solid. So I went into the arena with no expectations and Harrey decided he could do everything I asked for! We ended up placing First on day one of the trial and had qualifying scores taking 3rd place on each of the following days. But for me, the greatest reward was working together to move stock, on the course or in any other situation.

Reporter: It sounds like Harrey had a great time and that as a team you both enjoyed another trialing venue. Congratulations on your wins and Harrey's new title.

Brian: Thanks for your interest in Bearded Collies who herd!

TRAINING AT HOME

August is our month of family vacation time, so Allie's training this month was mostly meeting new people and socialization in strange places. She also made her conformation debut at a match and did a lovely job, stacking nicely, standing quietly for the judge's exam, and gaiting happily with the other puppies.

TEACHING THE WAIT FOR RELEASE

Allie LOVES to eat. She would knock me over to get to her food bowl if she was allowed to. I am using all this food drive to teach her to wait for her release word to eat. The first step was to make her offer me a down before I would put her food bowl on the floor. At first, she only had to wait for me to put the bowl on the floor before I told her "OK". Then she had to wait until I put the food on the floor and removed my hand from the bowl. The next step was to make her wait until I had put the bowl on the floor and stood up again. Then she had to wait until I stood up and told her she was good before getting the OK to eat. The video link shows where we are now. I can give her a string of nonsense words AND move around. She holds her down until still be made for the BAD relay competition and the veteran Glory Runs. Wishing everyone good luck and safe travels!

she hears OK. Teaching this kind of control should carry over when it comes time for stays at the start line.

STARTING THE REAR CROSS- STEP 1

Does your beardie spin at a jump when you try to rear cross? This happens because he/she doesn't know that you are asking for a change in direction. The first step in getting rid of this spin is to teach your partner a head turn when you cross behind them. To use this method your beardie will need to wait in a sit while you are behind them, only turning their head to follow your movement.

Happy training!
