HERDING NEWS

Elsa Sell • beaconbb@bellsouth.net

Spring is here, and may your trial season be rewarding. Along with those good wishes, remember that you need to be very diligent – the work is not over when you leave a trial. Do you know if every qualifying run has been correctly recorded by AKC? Class? Course? Level? Score? Title? Your herding committee data group works hard to detect inconsistencies as we enter the AKC info into the BCCA electronic herding database. We need you help on this too.

One person’s yet unresolved problem from an October 2017 trial involved no less than three issues over three trials:

- Credit for incorrect level
- No credit for one day’s Q or a title even though three requisite runs had happened
- Failure to give credit for a run that will contribute to a championship.

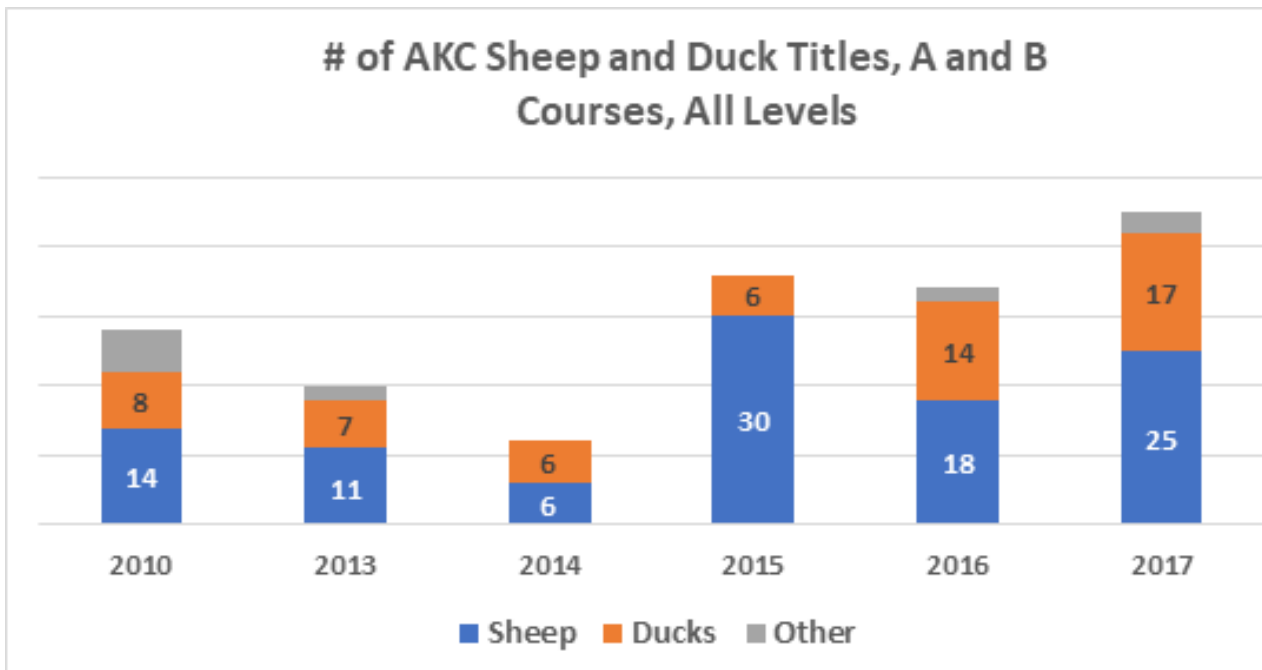

I am working on this with an AKC liaison. Let me know immediately if you find an error in your dog’s record, and what you have done to problem solve.

Always retain trial items as proof to contest a recording error

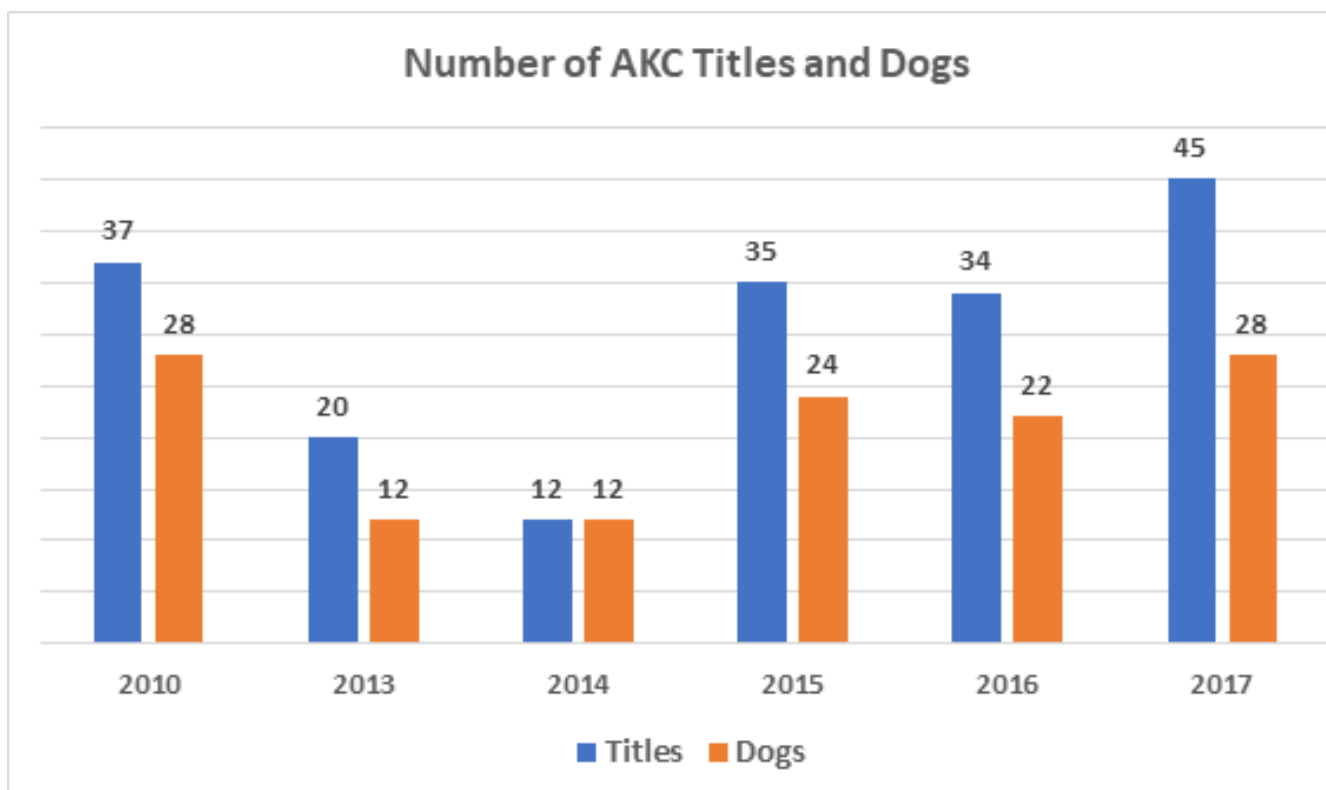

- Qualifying ribbons – these have trial, date, class, etc. printed the ribbon or on a label
- Placement ribbons – should have same info as qualifying ribbons
- Judge’s sheet – before leaving a trial, be sure the sheet is legible and that Q was checked
- Recent AKC Title Distribution by Stock

While entering your qualifying runs and titles into the electronic herding database, I’ve had a feeling that the proportion of titles obtained on ducks is higher recently. A quick look at the data confirms this for the last two years. Whether this represents more interest in ducks, more availability of ducks for training/trialing, or a “safer” stock to work is unknown. Ducks certainly are not easier! We shall see if the trend continues. The “other” category includes HC, DC, and one C course (2010).

See below for the number of dogs and the total number of titles.

HIGHLAND HERDING

Ann Witte (Bagpipes, July 2014)

An observation of temperament and behavior of the Beardies I have worked with in Europe has made me consider why those Beardies are different when it comes to instinct testing and control. In Europe, the dogs with talent want to move stock (many are quite keen), yet they are readily controlled. In America, they tend to react in a wilder, zoomier way to stock exposure. Perhaps we have something to learn from the Europeans here.

While the dogs' overall behavior when free to be themselves is very similar to the dogs here in the US, when these Beardies (European) are being trained for herding, they are all more respectful of their owners and other people. It is a distinct difference. I also have observed that a similar degree of respect is there in my dogs as compared to littermates owned by many other owners (pet or show) which often happily ignore efforts to get their attention and respect.

The answer must be how the Beardies are raised and managed as puppies. In Europe, dogs (and children) grow up knowing their "place." Discipline is firm and consistent, but always lovingly applied and not abusive. We in America seem to be applying the "Dr. Spock Principle" to our dogs, "don't inhibit the pup's (child's) naturally inclined behavior as you might suppress its inner being."

For a herding dog to be as biddable as possible, that dog must give respect to the trainer. As that respect is only learned young (otherwise it is obedience, not respect), we in America need to rethink our puppy-rearing practices if we want our Beardies to be "all that they can be" as herding dogs and companions.
