HERDING

Elsa Sell • beaconbb@bellsouth.net

Cattle Title. Congratulations to Dazzle, Balderdash Bedazzled at Balgrae, and Joanne Williamson on their AKC HSAC title on 8/2/2019.

Dazzle is the third Beardie to achieve a cattle title, assuming accurate records. The others are Max's Cassiopeia's Star, HXAc, 10/20/2000, owned by Alan and Judi Max and Bendale Singing The Blues HSAC, 12/6/2008, owned by Sandy Weiss and Bobbie Stuart.

MOUNDS. As to those mounds encountered in the specialty trial farm pastures, those are terraces. Terracing makes a number of level flat areas that are like steps within an area that is sloping. The area may be very very steep or gently sloping. Terraces have been used in agriculture for millennia to control soil erosion and surface runoff or to support growing crops that require irrigation (e.g., rice) as in the middle picture below.

AGILITY

John Youngblood

Unfortunately injuries are common occurrences in dog sports. I have found this to be particularly true with agility. Some injuries are minor ouchies and some are much more serious. In all cases, it is our job, as our dog's best friend and handler, to recognize and treat injuries when they occur and to try our best to prevent them from occurring in the first place.

For me, Razzles is my Novice A dog, and everything about dog sports is a new learning experience. Our running style is aggressive because running fast is the most fun for us. We are not consistent in the sense of running clean, but we are consistent in our style and having an absolute blast with each run.

Regardless of running style, agility is physically demanding for our breed. The purpose of this article is to share what I am learning and how I am currently managing injuries.

Razzles has always been injury prone. Thank goodness just one serious scare when she was quite young but mostly just ouchies. She has a history of developing trigger points and getting out of align. The telltale sign is heat radiating between her shoulders and hips. However, in 2019, our luck ran out. Razzles suffered her first major injury. A psoas strain put her on rest for a couple of months and then we had to slowly build her back up.

Putting a beardie on rest is painful for the owner. The dog has no idea why they are no longer allowed to be active and playing. There is no way to explain it to them. Beardies, being beardies, will always try to play...even if it causes pain. So managing the rest, especially if you are a household with other active dogs, is a challenge.

After rest period comes rehab. In our case, slow, incremental and measured. We developed a rehab plan with the short term goal of having us ready to run at the National Specialty this year and then continuing to build up to UKI US Open in November. The timing was a bit aggressive, but our amazing rehab vet thought it was possible. Then the unexpected happened. While building core strength back up Razzles suffered a new injury to her toe and shoulder. I was devastated. This injury prevented us from many of the rehab exercises we had initially planned and put our being ready for the specialty in extreme jeopardy.

This is a good time for me to discuss what I have been learning about injuries and prevention. Ever since a scare when Razzles was very young, I have become obsessive with proper warm-up and cool down exercises before and after each run in trials AND the same for each training session. No, it is not all that convenient. Yes, it is time consuming. However, I believe it is absolutely necessary, especially for beardies. It can be fun. Warm up and cool down walks and games in barns are something Razzles looks forward to now. (We trial in lots of horse facilities with barns that can be transformed into a beardie playground, if you so desire.)

Limiting runs. In my case I have chosen to limit the number of trials, trial runs and formal agility training. Typically we will trial only two weekend days and will limit the number of runs per days to 3. Sometimes just 2, sometimes up to 4, but most often, 3. We take a couple of planned month long or longer breaks during the year. I have found this keeps her fresh and has limited her ouchies.

Core conditioning. I have not always been consistent with core conditioning. Especially when we got a new puppy. At that time basically all core activities ceased. I am not sure this was the sole cause of our psoas injury, but it certainly did not help. I am now committed to core building exercises and doing them several times per week. It really only takes about 10 minutes per day and it is perhaps the best 10 minutes you can spend with your furry friend.

Regular stretching and massage. I have learned how to perform basic massage and stretching techniques. Again, I stopped doing these when the new puppy arrived. They take a bit longer. Approx 20 minutes a session, but I now am committed to doing these at least 2x per week and after the last run of day at trials.

Professional chiro exams. This is how Razzle's psoas injury was discovered. It is also the only way I know of to get them back into proper alignment once they get out. Beardies have a long body type and for sports dogs, I believe regular chiro adjustments can be extremely helpful.

So...things looked a bit bleak for being ready for the national specialty. Our vet gave me a cold laser for home use and we did regular chiro and acupuncture sessions all in an effort to be ready for the specialty. Then, the week of, I took Razzles to an agility course to work contact obstacles. She had not seen them since early in the year. I figured she would either stay together or break down. One way or another we would know if she was ready for trial or ready for more treatment.

She ran each contact obstacle 3x and a sequence of 12 obstacles. She came out of it good. It was her first explosive activity of her rehab. Her vet then examined her and cleared us to run with caution at the specialty.

We did a few runs at a local trial before heading to NC. I was NERVOUS. We were definitely out of synch and her time was approx 4 seconds off her regular pace, but she was running, was happy and it felt awesome! When we got to the national specialty, I was not sure how many runs she could handle. After taking down 7 bars in jumpers, the on site massage therapist checked her out and found lots and lots of sore spots. Going from zero explosive activity to trials was quite a jump and she was feeling it. The massage therapist believed it was just soreness so we treated with laser and an Assisi Loop. All of our runs after coming back were filled with at least one error. I debated whether or not to run her in Time2Beat, the last event of the trial. However, we had worked so hard I wanted to give her one more chance. Her speed was getting better with each run and in Time2Beat we finally put it all together and had a clean run!

As we walked back to our crating area, I sobbed. Razzles had no idea why. Part of it was I was so happy that we had reached our goal...no injury setbacks and a clean run at the specialty. I reflected on all our work to get there. But I also knew it was most likely our last run at 20". At 7 years old and with her history of injuries I had decided to drop her to preferred after the specialty.

Agility as we know it is about to change. No longer will we be training or trialing as frequently as the past. No longer will we be pushing the limits to see just how close we can get to those fast border collies. Moving in this direction is a difficult choice, because it forces me to admit my most special girl is not going to be young forever. It's a hard realization, but one made with Razzles best interest in mind.

But before we completely transition to our new approach we are training for one last hurrah. We are currently focused on being at full beardie power for the UKI US Open in November. At her new 16" jump height Razzles just may be poised to push those border collies one last time. One thing is for sure, we will be aggressive, we will run fast, have fun and fully embrace each run regardless of outcome.
